Report of Visit to Levy's

We lunched today at the Azalea Room, my daughter, my son and I. We arrived at a few minutes before twelve; Dottie bought a lip stick and the three of us sauntered into the dining area where a man, apparently food service manager, was busy icing glasses. The place was not crowded at all. I went up to the man who indicated that my party was to take a seat at the counter. I said to him that we wished a table, speaking quietly though audibly and in a matter-of-fact manner. He stopped what he was doing, picked up three menu cards and showed us to a table in the middle of the floor. Promptly after sitting we were greeted by a very neat, young cordial waitress who smiled graciously and asked us what we liked. Billy finally chose shrimp and french fried with a tossed salad after I chose a low caloric listing and Dottie deviled crabs and tossed salad. We ate liesurely. The beverages were iced tea except for Billy's taking milk.

There was no evidence of hostility except for the possible reluctance or annoyance on the part of the "manager". I am not sure of this. None of the other employees nor any patrons evidenced anything of this nature; there were some mildly curious glances our way. I came away not too impressed with the quisine but the service was quite well done. The waitress inquired if we cared for anything else, I responded with "no thank you". We left after I paid the cashier the check in the amount of $3.71 and asked her to give the change to our waitress. She politely and smilingly agreed.
